E. Neil Moore, an emeritus professor of biomedical science in Penn's School of Veterinary Medicine, passed away recently. He was 89.

Dr. Moore joined Penn Vet's faculty in 1962 as an assistant professor of physiology and animal biology. In 1966, he rose to the rank of associate professor, and became a full professor four years later. While at Penn, he conducted research with colleague Joseph F. Spear about lethal cardiac arrhythmias using electro-physiology. He published this research extensively in peer-reviewed journals, drawing connections between treatment of disorders in animals and humans.
